Spring
2024

Welcome to Spring 2024 from Thistledown!

Legacy is the thread that runs through this year's spring list.

The Rasmussen Papers, Connie Gault's cheeky homage to Henry James, delves into the complexities of poetic legacy and literary ambition; in The Beech Forest, Marlis Wesseler explores the reverberations of the Holocaust in the life of one ordinary woman living in present-day Saskatchewan; and in the debut poetry collection by Métis poet E. McGregor, What Fills Your House Like Smoke, the legacy of colonialism haunts every page. Though these three books look back and contemplate the legacy of the past, each in its own way also looks forward into a more just, peaceful, and equitable future.

About the Author

Connie Gault has written for stage and radio and film. Her first novel, Euphoria, won a Saskatchewan Book Award for Fiction and was short-listed for the High Plains Fiction Award and the Commonwealth Prize for Best Novel of Canada and the Caribbean. A Beauty won the 2016 Saskatchewan Book of the Year as well as the award for fiction, and was long-listed for the Scotiabank Giller Prize. A former prose editor of Grain magazine, Connie has also edited books of fiction and has taught many creative writing classes and mentored emerging writers. After spending most of her life in Saskatchewan, she now lives in London, Ontario.

The Rasmussen Papers by Connie Gault

"The Rasmussen Papers is an urban fox of a novel—light-boned, beautiful and sly. I loved every inch of it, from the dark knowing of its nose to the quicksilver tip of its tail."

—Alissa York, author of Far Cry

A delightfully cunning, sharply insightful novel about ambition and subterfuge from the author of the Giller-longlisted novel A Beauty.

This novel's unnamed narrator is so obsessed with the desire to write the biography of her literary hero, the late poet Marianne Rasmussen, that she assumes a false name and talks her way into the house of Rasmussen's former lover, Aubrey Ash. She gets more than a foot in the door—she moves in as a lodger, gaining precious daily contact with frail, crusty, almost-centenarian Aubrey and his handsome, younger (but hardly young) brother Harry.

The would-be biographer tries to ingratiate herself with both the Ash Brothers. She flatters Aubrey and she flirts with Harry, but the harder she tries to get her hands on the coveted prize—access to the Rasmussen papers—the more she gets tangled in a trap that might just be of her own making. Can she resist the temptation to possess, by any means, the letters, photographs and first drafts that could unlock the secret to Marianne Rasmussen's genius?

The Rasmussen Papers is a brilliant reply to Henry James' The Aspern Papers. Connie Gault flips James' story on its head and slides it into contemporary Toronto's Cabbagetown, among the marginalized and dispossessed, people the narrator studies as intently as she studies everyone she meets—until a confrontation on a streetcar makes her reconsider the limits of what you can know of another's story, and how hidden we all are, especially from ourselves.

"The Rasmussen Papers is an intricate puzzle-box, perfectly proportioned and opening with a click of recognition—but this variation on a Jamesian theme is completely original and unexpected. Gault presses echoes and refractions on us until quite gently the puzzle opens and we see revealed the inner prize: one lonely mind and soul. The best book I've read in years."

—Marina Endicott, author of The Observer

Praise for A Beauty:

"Gault is a genius. Her prose is tough and lyrical, her wisdom startling . . ."
—Lorna Crozier

"Evocative, laced with humour, precisely sculpted yet mysterious at its core—A Beauty takes us on a journey deep into the Canadian prairie of the 1930s. As the story unspools, we find ourselves transported into the minds and hearts of dozens of hugely differing and unforgettable characters, each brought so vividly to life."

About the Author

Born in Kinistino, Saskatchewan, Marlis Wessler attended university in Saskatoon and Regina, taught school in the North, travelled extensively and has lived and worked in Regina for over forty years. The Beech Forest is her sixth book of fiction. Award-winning and often nominated, her previous books include the short story collections, Life Skills and Imitating Art, and the novels, Elvis Unplugged, South of the Border, and The Last Chance Ladies' Book Club.

The Beech Forest

by Marlis Wessler

"This powerful novel speaks to all who grapple with shameful events in their culture's past. Interweaving this stark subject with the quotidian events of the main character's life as a wife and mother makes this story—full of strong characters, wit and drama, both in Germany and Saskatchewan—deeply compelling and relatable."

—Joan Givner, author of Half-Known Lives and Playing Sarah Bernhardt

Lisa Braun struggles to understand both her own life and the tragic historic events that haunt her in this engaging new novel written in Marlis Wessler's characteristically understated, confiding prose.

The novel begins with Lisa heading off into a beautiful beech forest in Germany, near where her in-laws live. As she walks, she ponders the stark contrast between the peaceful forest and the notorious concentration camp, both known as Buchenwald. Her husband Gerhard's family has always been reticent, or maybe evasive, about the Holocaust and their family's World War Two experiences, and Lisa has learned not to ask too many questions.

After they return to Canada, Lisa unexpectedly finds herself very alone and at loose ends, and through a series of events befriends an elderly man, Ben Meisner, who was interned in Buchenwald—and the questions she has always wanted to ask come searingly into focus. Lisa gets a closer view of unthinkable events than she bargained for, and in time Ben Meisner relies on her in a way she could never have predicted.

This wry, perceptive novel is about secrets and silences; about estrangements between family members, and gaps in understanding between well-intentioned people who struggle to bridge the distances between one another. The Beech Forest looks into the dark corners of the human heart, and brings us back out into the light of day with humour and compassion.

"This should be a somber book, but it is anything but: Marlis Wessler is a master of tongue-in-cheek observations and insights. This novel is evocative, sharply engaging and often laugh-out-loud funny."

—J. Jill Robinson, author of More in Anger

Praise for Past Work:

The Last Chance Ladies' Book Club: "Wessler deftly manages a balance of darkness spiced with wit and empathy, as the book club loses its innocence and characters are thrust into a divisive dilemma . . . and readers willingly engage with this original compelling page-turner to find out the truth."

—Book of the Year Award Juror statement, Saskatchewan Book Awards, 2018

"In her wonderfully comic, quietly humane novel, Elvis Unplugged, Marlis Wessler masters a confident and compelling narrative voice."

About the Author

E. McGregor is a Euro-Settler/Métis writer currently living in Winnipeg, Manitoba. Her poetry, fiction and creative nonfiction have appeared in numerous magazines including Room, The Dalhousie Review, CV2, The Fiddlehead, and others. She obtained a Master of Fine Arts in Creative Writing from the University of British Columbia in 2022. What Fills Your House Like Smoke is her first poetry collection.

What Fills Your House Like Smoke

by E. McGregor

In this debut poetry collection, E. McGregor combines the lore of family history with personal memory, vividly parsing patterns of inheritance, particularly through the maternal line.

What Fills Your House Like Smoke begins and ends at the deathbed of the writer's Métis grandmother. In between, McGregor composes an incomplete and wildly imaginative biography of her grandmother, interrogated by family photographs, stories, and the scant paper trail she left behind.

McGregor sifts through the complexities of motherhood, daughterhood, anxiety, intimate relationships and addiction, weaving family history with memory to make sense of what is carried on. Especially affecting are poems about childhood and the people who disappear from a child's life, and the struggle to live as a societal outsider, finding strength in self-definition and the power of narrative.

As these poems unfold, they move us toward an understanding of maternal inheritance, shifting identities, forgiveness, and finally love.

Excerpt from What Fills Your House Like Smoke:

Inheritance

Avoidance, the art of skirting
his cane or his hand,
we speed like wolf
spiders, hunting in dark corners games out of sight, smothering giggles erupting like spring grass fires
that might catch wind and burn him up.

Praise for What Fills Your House Like Smoke:

"There is a rawness and tender vulnerability in the re-membering of a mother's mother's life in the thematic dotted lines, hardlines and blurred lines of McGregor's poetry. For bodies under duress, survival is instinctive and passed on, and a breakthrough from the trauma endured is made possible in an honest remembering to liberate oneself."

—Rita Bouvier, author of a beautiful rebellion

"What Fills Your House Like Smoke is a staggering collection . . . technically agile and thematically nuanced. McGregor's poems have the effect of flame, sucking the air out of the room; of a soothing hand on your chest, reminding you to breathe. An indelible debut."

—Hollay Ghadery, author of Rebellion Box

This evocative new poetry collection speaks with a fierce tenderness of many aspects of the poet's life: a childhood spent on the banks of the Churchill River, the death of a beloved one, the struggle to try to find forgiveness for wrongs done and the weariness of trying to redress those wrongs. And, most poignantly, a beautiful rebellion reaches one hand back to Louis Riel and one hand forward to future Métis generations.
